BOTH SIDES CONFIDENT

Two weeks before election and the campaign has apparently reached a phase where both parties claim what they do not feel the safety of their party. While the Democrats are working diligently in the south the Republicans are working none the less untiringly in the west and both parties claim the doubtful states New York, Indiana, Connecticut, West Virginia, New Jersey and Montana. Both parties are expecting much help from their fusions, and while the Democrats feel confident of some western states the Republicans expect equally as much help from fusion in the south. If fusion succeeds in the south and fails in the west Mr Harrison is sure of election even without New York. If fusion fails in the south and succeeds in the west then Mr Cleveland is sure of an election also without New York. But it is quite safe in presuming that fusion will not play so important a part as to assure an election to either party without the aid of the electoral votes of New York. Of the four pivotal states of 1888, New York, Indiana, West Virginia and Connecticut, both Democrats and Republicans are much concerned in regard to the two states which they carried in that year, and entertain big hopes of the two they lost. The Democrats do not concede Connecticut as entirely safe and they do not brighten up over the prospects of carrying New York, which they lost. On the other hand they feel very confident of Indiana, which makes it all the more necessary for the Republicans to carry New York. The Republicans realize the task they have before them to carry New York, and with this ample warning are not liable to lose the state through the apathy of over-confidence. The fusion tendency in the west will undoubtedly be overcome and upon the result of the labors in the next two weeks the result of the election depends. A great deal is at stake and the fight from now on will be desperate and tremendous.

THE AMERICAN RAILROAD SYSTEM

We commend to the attention of our readers the following extract from an address delivered last month before the Commercial convention held at Grand Forks, N. D. by Joseph Nimmo, Jr. The whole address is marked by a broad intelligence and full of wise and weighty suggestions. After a careful and able discussion of the interesting question pertinent to the occasion he addresses to the broad fields of commercial development opening in all its abundance to the whole northwest and the paramount importance of the home market for American productions. The value of the internal commerce of the United States is larger than the entire interstate commerce of the globe. Our home markets are greater than the entire foreign market for which all the commercial nations are competing. We must look to the home market for the sale of 80 per cent of our wheat crop, for the sale of all our rapidly increasing wool crop, for the sale of all our other agricultural products marketed outside of the state, and the same is true of the products of all other industries. As the west increases in population and wealth we will develop a large and diversified trade which will reach to all parts of the New England states with all other Atlantic seaboard states, with the gulf states and throughout the grand region that promising field of our future commercial enterprise.

The question of transportation becomes one of incalculable importance and Mr Nimmo enters upon an elaborate discussion of what he calls the American railroad system as follows.

Let us now consider some matters of vital importance to us in this wonderful instrumentality of transportation by which this vast internal commerce is to be carried on. The American railroad system, with its trackage in the hands of the railroads of the country, has been subjected to a severe pressure, undisturbed by [illegible] your attention has been called to the [illegible] which have been made in the cost of transportation during this period of strife, has been beneficial but the disorders which led to unjust discriminations in rates and to that uncertainty which is so deadening to trade are always baneful.

One of the most serious obstacles to a proper government of the American railroad system arises from an apprehension in the public mind that transportation companies are striving to get the advantage of commerce and the productive industries of the country. I am not here to assert that there has not been occasion for such apprehension, nor am I here to reflect upon any of your local regulations of railroads, concerning which I am not sufficiently informed to pass any possible opinion. But I do believe that in this work of regulating the railroads the people of this country generally are coming to the conclusion that all such restraints must leave the companies the right to live and to enlarge their powers as indispensable agencies in the great work of transportation. Besides, every day it is becoming clearer to the people that the commercial function of the country are much more potential than any sort of railroad combination. The constant fall of rates clearly proves that.

Still the momentous question arises, How are we going to control and to bring under wholesome restraints these mighty forces—the powers of commerce, the powers of transportation, and the irresistible political powers in the hands of the people? Such restraint is obviously necessary in order to secure the orderly conduct of the American railroad system. Men say the task is inexplicable—all we can do is to wait until some appalling disaster overtakes us and then start afresh with some new plan of action evolved out of the general wreck. I smile at such forebodings and such lack of faith. No man nor combination of men can convince me that the men of this generation have created a commercial and industrial order which they have not the intelligence and virtue to administer. The solution of the great problem of properly governing the American railroad system is, I believe, much nearer than is generally supposed—I believe it ought to be and that it will be accomplished within the next five years. This belief is based upon faith in the intelligence, the self-contained judgment and the inherent honesty and integrity of the American mind. I believe the solution of this great problem must come first through agreements in the nature of self restraint among the representative and leading men now engaged in the conduct of the transportation interests of the country, such agreements being dictated by the lessons of experience. Then I maintain that the legislator should take up the formulated principles and rules thus wrought out by professional traffic managers for the maintenance of order and justice in our transportation affairs and in so far as they may prove to be beneficial to the commercial and industrial interests of the whole country give these rules legal sanction. In this way alone as I firmly believe can we reach a beneficial exercise of that power conferred by the fathers upon the national government in the words of the constitution "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the states."

The point which I desire to impress upon your minds today is that we shall not be able to secure from whole country the full benefits of the powerful lines of the American railroad system that exist [illegible] subjects to wise restraint [illegible]

[illegible]

The cities in this the Second Congressional district is attracting more than an attention. The Republican press over the state especially in the [illegible] is paying Hon H. H. Eddy a [illegible] element respect. The interest that has been aroused in the contest in the [illegible] long that could happen. The [illegible] is practically Republican and all that is needed is to get out the Republican vote to assure Hon Edgar success. A full Republican vote means Republican victory without doubt, and the interest which the contest is exciting will bring the vote out. The people have the issues to determine in the election of congressman as they have in the election of president. It is a question of protection against free trade. Mr. Bell, People's party candidate, has made what record he has with a view to [illegible] and is now associating with advocates of the total demonetization of silver. If elected Mr. Bell will vote in congress as his party now demand. On the other hand Mr. Eddy is a sound, intelligent and aggressive advocate of free and unlimited coinage and protection, and is capable of using his voice and vote beside the prestige of the Republican party of Colorado in behalf of American interests. He will be elected if the people of the district want a representative of Americanism and not one who votes and acts with a party of free traders.

A man of the ability of Thomas M. Patterson should have more than one set of arguments for his political speeches. In opening his speech at Trinidad this week he said the progress of the town was checked and not as prosperous a condition as formerly. He said the same thing of Colorado Springs Thursday night. He said if this was not so of Trinidad it must be an isolated town and repeated his remarks about Colorado Springs. Now, Mr. Patterson knows as do the citizens of Trinidad and this city, that there are not two more prosperous towns in the state, and that the cities are enjoying a steady and continuous growth. Colorado Springs lays claim only to being a residence town, while Trinidad is a manufacturing and farming district, and such cases of calamity originating in the mind of one person and the stereotyped arguments being used in every town irrespective of how they apply to the facts certainly will not help to invigorate their growth.

The Republican state ticket is clean throughout, and no person can honestly refuse to vote for it. It should and probably will receive nearly the full vote of the party.

Exploration of the Hindu Kush.

Our London Times.

CALCUTTA, Sept. 26.—Mr. Conway's mountaineering party, which left Askoley on July 31, reached the foot of the Baltoro Glacier after four days' march, and proceeded up the glacier for four days. They then climbed a peak north of it 20,000 feet high, which they named Crystal Peak, and hoped to get a view of the great peak "K2," but it was hidden by a neighboring peak. They then went another day's march up the glacier and climbed a pass to the east of Crystal Peak 18,000 feet high. From this they saw "K2," but discovered that the map was altogether wrong in the representation of the neighborhood of that peak. They also found the Baltoro glacier considerably longer than the map makes it. A high peak not marked on the map stands at the very head of the glacier. This Mr. Conway named the Golden Throne. They determined to try the ascent, and went one march further up the glacier and then were stopped by a snowstorm, during which they sent the coolies down to collect firewood.

They reached the foot of the Golden Throne on Aug. 18, and then worked up behind the peak, climbing over 3000 feet through a very broken ice-fall. It took four days to establish and victual a camp above the ice fall at a height of 18,000 feet. They moved next day to a camp 19,000 feet, and the day following to one about 20,000 feet high.

Thence, on the 25th they started for a real climb and, having reached a point over 23,000 feet high, they found they were on a mountain entirely cut off from the Golden Throne, which was still 3000 feet above them. The peak they ascended—which they named the Pioneer Peak—commanded a magnificent view, especially in the Hunza direction, where they could see to the distance of at least 300 miles. They suffered from the great altitude, but not severely, and they could have climbed at least a thousand feet higher and perhaps more. They slept that night in their camp 20,000 feet above sea level.

They were obliged to descend next day as their provisions were exhausted. Bad weather commenced on the 27th, and continued, putting an end to climbing for the present season.

Mr. Conway has gone to Leh, for the purpose of comparing his barometer with the standard there, and accurately reckoning the height of the Pioneer peak. He expects that the comparison will show that they attained a height at least a thousand feet above Schlagintweit's 23,230ft. in Nepaul, which is the highest climb hitherto authentically recorded. He will then return to India.

Irrigation in the Western States of America.

London Times.

A recently issued census bulletin states that the total number of artesian wells on farms in June 1890, in the states and territories forming the western half of the United States was 8,097, representing an estimated aggregate investment of $1,988,461. Complete statistics concerning the depth, cost, discharge and other features of 2,971 of such wells fairly distributed through the various states and counties from which they are reported, have been obtained from the owners and from the averages derived from such statistics the number of artesian wells used for the purpose of irrigation is computed at 3,930, the average depth per well 210.41 feet, the average cost per well $245.50, the total discharge of water per minute 440,719.71 gallons or 54.41 gallons per well per minute, the average area irrigated per well 13.21 acres and the average cost of water per acre irrigated $18.58. Over one-half of these wells are in the state of California, where 38,678 acres of agricultural land were irrigated by artesian water. Utah stands second in the number of artesian wells used for irrigation purposes and Colorado in the area of land thus irrigated, followed at a long distance by Texas and other states.

A Pig Race.

Some years ago in celebration of the [illegible] Agricultural fair at Baden Baden a pig race was held on the Iffezheim race course. The pigs were trained by being fed once daily for a fortnight at a certain spot on the race course. On the day of the event the animals were let loose at the starting line, as was also a few hundred pieces from the feeding troughs and scampered toward the goal in wild confusion, emitting loud grunts of satisfaction. The pigs were arranged according to the regulations of the turf and each pig was painted its own colored green, blue, [illegible] and yellow beforehand. The sight was [illegible] amusing and one not easily forgotten.—Sporting Life.

The decision of the trustees of ... Seminary, by a vote of nineteen to one, to sever connection with the General Assembly puts a new aspect upon the now celebrated Briggs case coming as it does just at the time when the synod of New York is trying the Union professor The action of the trustees is based on constitutional grounds rather than on considerations pertaining to Professor Briggs personally, inasmuch as the best legal opinion declares that the seminary had no right to yield the veto power to the General Assembly when the compact was made in 1870 The former status is now renewed and the assurance is given by the trustees of undiminished loyalty on the part of the seminary to the doctrine and government of the Presbyterian church The trustees have doubtless counted the cost in advance and probably are confident that the seminary will not lack in the future money or students Union Seminary is not the only institution which has made itself obnoxious to a large element among the Presbyterians. The trial of Prof H P Smith of Lane Seminary at Cincinnati has already begun and so the odium of heresy is attached to two of the most famous theological schools of the Presbyterian church Widespread and intense as is the antagonism to both these Christian teachers it is likely to decrease as time goes on and as their real views become better understood

Noted Reed.

The important dramatic event of the season will be the appearance at the opera house to night of this famous comedian as Tobias Pickington in his latest success "Innocent as a Lamb," with which he has been crowding the theaters throughout the country. The distinguished dramatic critic Nym Crinkle thus reviews Mr Reed: "Mr Roland Reed is sufficiently unlike other comedians of the day to be particularized. He is always funny without trying to be. This is a tremendous advantage. With most comedians the funny efforts make the funny results look small. Roland Reed was born so and doesn't know it. He would give even a funeral sermon a quaintness and piquancy that would turn woe with smiles. Something is due to his unparalleled personal appearance. Nature was sportive when she put his lower jaw together and grew jolly when she finished off his unparagoned nose and pushed out his intellectual expanse of forehead. At the wildest moments of fun there is a plaintive, penetrative sorrow on his sharp face that seems to protest against the laugh he has raised".

Death of Capt. Frederick P White.

Capt. Frederick P White of the Pacific Mail steamship "Costa Rica," died yesterday at 517 North Tejon street of pulmonary consumption, at the age of 51.

Captain White was a native of South Yarmouth, Mass., and at an early age commenced his seafaring life. He entered the employ of the P M S S. Co. twenty two years ago, and at the time of his death was the senior captain on the Pacific side, running between Panama and Acapulco. Captain White was a man of sterling qualities.

His chief characteristic was to do his duty under all circumstances. This was never better shown than in the courageous devotion to the interests of the P M S S Co and his unflagging fidelity to the welfare and safety of his passengers, when a year ago last August, while in command of the steamship "City of Panama" he earned a national reputation by his refusal to surrender to the republic of Salvador five political refugees who were passengers on his ship.

During the time he was in the employ of the P M S S Co he commanded seven of their ships, viz Winchester, Honduras, South Carolina, Costa Rica, Clyde, City of Panama, and lastly the new ship Costa Rica, built in '91.

Captain White arrived here last May on leave of absence in search of health and the news of his untimely death will cause sadness to his many friends. A wife and one son survive him. His remains will be interred here.

Roland Reed.

The important dramatic event of the season will be the appearance at the opera house to-night of this famous comedian as Tobias Pickington in his latest success "Innocent as a Lamb," with which he has been crowding the theaters throughout the country. The distinguished dramatic critic, Nym Crinkle, thus reviews Mr. Reed: "Mr. Roland Reed is sufficiently unlike other comedians of the day to be particularized. He is always funny without trying to be. This is a tremendous advantage. With most comedians the funny efforts make the funny results look small. Roland Reed was born so and doesn't know it. He would give even a funeral sermon a quaintness and piquancy that would trim wee with smiles. Something is due to his unparalleled personal appearance. Nature was effective when she put his bones together and grew jolly when she finished off his unparagoned nose and peaked out his intellectual expanse of forehead. At the wildest moments of fun there is a primitive, penetrative serenity on his shaven face that seems to make it mind the laugh he has raised."

A sterilized milk is an absolute necessity in Typhoid and Cholera cases, as well as all infantile troubles. But do not lose sight of the culinary side of our goods.
